Your Firm Could Be Sitting On Hidden Gems In Your File Cabinets

Florida law allows an injured employee to collect workers compensation benefits, and at the same time, file a claim against third parties responsible for his/her injuries. However, our experience has taught us that many legitimate third party cases are not pursued for a variety of reasons. Cases may be passed over as too costly and risky, or may be overlooked altogether. Some third party cases are easy to spot, while others are more complex and may be camouflaged among the myriad of details about the case. These cases include many areas of law such as products liability, premises liability, contractor/subcontractor liability, medical malpractice, and even spoliation of evidence.

Third party cases often require considerable cost expenditures which have to be paid by the Plaintiff's attorney and cannot be recovered until the case is settled or won. Many attorneys do not wish to underwrite such costs, nor undertake the risk of non-recovery. Stabinski and Funt has the financial resources and, under most circumstances, will front these costs without help from its referral and co-counsel attorneys.

For over 30 years, Stabinski and Funt have represented injured employees in pursuit of maximizing their recovery after a work-related accident. Our jury verdicts and settlements often surpass the expectations of our clients, while giving their workers compensation attorneys the opportunity to earn substantial referral and co-counsel fees on cases they may never have pursued. In fact, we have had significant success with cases that were turned down by one or more attorneys before they came to us.

Due to our experience, expertise, and financial resources, we are willing and able to spot third party cases, and take on many cases that other attorneys would not accept on a contingency basis.

Since 1971, our firm has had thousands of verdicts and settlements in our clients' favor, and has been involved in over 100 appellate opinions in Florida state and federal courts, including several landmark cases in various areas of law.

You have nothing to lose in allowing us to evaluate your Workers Compensation cases for potential third party claims.
